I'm working on a script that makes an audio file switch to multiple tracks of the audio file and then continue playing a different audio file on those tracks. I have found AppleScripts that let me do this manually, but I'm trying to script it. This is what I have so far, I'm not sure how to make it play multiple tracks and then start the other audio file on those tracks. tell application "Finder" activate set thePath to (path to desktop) set theName to (name of thePath) set theDestination to (quoted form of POSIX path of thePath) end tell tell application "AudioPlayer" set theSource to (make new audio source with properties {volume:100, rate:44100, file:theDestination}) play theSource end tell A: To make this script start a new audio file on each of the tracks of the source audio file, you'll need to tell the AudioPlayer application to pause the source audio file and then to play the target audio file on each of the tracks of the source. If you have a reasonably recent version of macOS, you can use the New Media Player for this purpose. If you're making this script for a system that doesn't have that feature, you'll have to add more play/pause commands to the script, and you'll have to add them manually. I made the following script that I use for one of my tracks, to demonstrate that this can be done.

There were also differences in the travel history results between those infected in the Zhejiang, Hubei, and Shanghai areas. Travel history data show that some patients were infected after traveling to Wuhan. For example, three patients infected after departing from Wuhan or Zhejiang Province returned from Wuhan. One patient infected after traveling to Wuhan, Wenzhou, Hubei, and Zhejiang Province was detected in Zhongxiang City in Hubei Province. A patient infected after traveling to Shanghai was detected in Shanghai. In all, 10 patients infected after traveling were detected in their home provinces, and only one infected after traveling was detected in other regions. According to the characteristics of the number of new cases, more intensive surveillance and tracking of the source and route of infection are necessary. Our study had several limitations. First, the number of subjects was relatively small, and this may affect the accuracy of the results. Second, the
