How do I find out what Graphics/Video Device Driver my Computer is Using

A: First The Graphics Processor (GPU) is the hardware device that renders 3D graphics. It is a component of the video card that works independently of the CPU. You can install your video card without its GPU, and then later add the GPU. The GPU is more like a processor, and it will have separate memory. In some cases, you will have to install it on the motherboard, but you can also install it separately on a separate component. Second GPUs are software dependent, and they also have drivers. Drivers are software that work with the operating system to communicate with the hardware. In Windows, AMD and NVIDIA are the main GPU vendors. Drivers are also available for these vendors. In all cases, the minimum version of DirectX is 9.0. If you have a ATI GPU, then you should have the WDDM 1.0 or higher driver. If you have an nVidia GPU, then you should have a WDDM 1.1 or later driver. In the past, AMD cards had a WDDM 2.0, but starting with 10x, and today, those are called WDDM 1.0 or higher, and they work with the WDDM 1.1 or later driver. Third Intel, and the newest releases of AMD both work with a WDDM 1.0 or higher driver. If your GPU is unsupported, then you need to search the internet for the correct driver. It is also possible to manually download the driver on the manufacturer's website. Q: Website take up too much space? I am just wondering if the problem of this website takes up too much space As you can see the logo and search bar take up most of the space on the website and the logo is too big, when I resize the viewport it still takes up too much space in my opinion. I want to know if I can do something to increase the size of the logo and search bar so I don't have to scroll so much. A: For the title, just use overflow: hidden; to hide the excess. For the logo, you can try to scale it with css, but you should know that logo takes a lot of space by itself. For the Search bar, just use the display property and make it none until it's needed. Of course, these are my subjective ideas, feel free to ask more questions if
