

Dec 19, 2014 First, you need to unlock the routes by completing the story missions . If you fail to unlock, the routes can be accessed by going to your . A: There are four routes that you unlock during the main story. 1) Endorsements As in a Story campaign, you earn levels while navigating the routes. 2) Gold Tier Fleets After you have reached level 10 with a fleet, it also unlocks a fleet tier where you can select a certain path that you want to complete. 3) Fleet You have this map and you can see where your other fleet members are and act as a network of ships. 4) Kenway's Fleet If you have unlocked it for any of the above, it will show up near your ship (on your map). Q: Generalization of BER metrics for non-binary alphabets We are trying to determine the decoding capability of a low rate STBC code ( $\text{rate} = \frac{1}{2}$ ) with  $M=2N$ . First we assume that the channel is AWGN and use the BER metric to find the maximum likelihood (ML) decoding. This is fine when we are dealing with binary code as the BER is just a function of the number of errors (i.e.,  $B \propto M$  and the error probability is simply  $B/M$ ). What if the constellation contains more than two symbols? To maintain a BER of  $10^{-4}$  (required by IEEE 802.11n [4]) in a two dimensional constellation we have a data rate of  $\frac{3.2}{2}$  Mbps, which is in violation of IEEE 802.11n. The problem can be rectified by considering  $N$ -dim cosets of a binary code. Is there an extension of the BER metric to capture the decoding capability of this type of codes? If not, can someone suggest a BER metric or a deterministic sphere decoding method that will capture the decoding capability of such a code? A: The sphere decoding algorithm is very well explained in the book, "Sphere decoding of linear block codes" by S.K. Mitra and S. Som:
